The Economics of Prosperity Rethinking Economic Growth and Development

Shawn Ritenour, Grove City College, US

'Professor Ritenour explains why a prosperous and growing economy requires an institutional and cultural framework that encourages entrepreneurship. Economists often emphasize investment and technological developments, insufficiently recognizing the importance of the creative activity of entrepreneurs. Ritenour clearly describes the ingredients that are necessary to produce prosperity.'

TEXTBOOK Macroeconomics for Development

Prognosis and Prospects

Raghbendra Jha, Australian National University

'Jha has written the ultimate book for the student, teacher or researcher working on the theory and practice of macroeconomics in developing countries. While it is a comprehensive book, covering almost every important topic in macro decision-making one can think of, it is written in an easily-accessible manner for both students not fully familiar with the subject and researchers actively working in this area. The range of topics covered is very wide – fiscal policy, financial inclusion and financial institutions, the unique aspects of monetary theory as applied to low and middle-income countries, as well as the foundations of stochastic general equilibrium macro models. There's even a chapter on the economic effects of the COVID-19 pandemic on the economies of developing countries! In his usual style, Jha covers all the important points one needs to know in a particular topic – the theory underlying the topic, the historical context and the evolution of the literature in that area, any empirical debates or controversies, and the implications for public policies. Jha's book is a tour de force in the field of macro-development – a must-read book that should be on any graduate development economic course syllabus!'

PAPERBACK Strategic Community Partnerships, Philanthropy, and Nongovernmental Organization

David J. Maurrasse, Marga Incorporated; Earth Institute and Columbia University, US

'As this volume trenchantly documents, our world faces the ravages of a perfect storm, shedding a glaring light on the disparate impact in our local communities of long-standing systemic racism, continually widening wealth gaps, and a raging global pandemic. Under this spotlight, the urgency and timeliness of strategic, cross-sector sustainable partnerships among organizations anchored in place, undergirded by enlightened philanthropy, and committed to moving the needle on the public good, could not be clearer. By documenting the efforts of ten such partnerships-in-place, spanning localities across the US and the globe, David Maurrasse brings home forceful shared lessons for progress.'

'Inequality in the distributions of income and wealth continues to rise. Meanwhile, since the global financial crisis, central bankers have become aware that in a monetary-production economy, there's more to life than "fine tuning" an economy with reference to an inflation target. The time is therefore ripe for reinvigoration of research into the links between monetary policy and distribution. And with its clear focus throughout on the interest rate-income distribution nexus, this book delivers.'

Youth Employment Insecurity and Pension Adequacy

Edited by Dirk Hofäcker, University of Duisburg-Essen, Germany and Kati Kuitto, Finnish Centre for Pensions, Finland

'Young people face many immediate challenges in today's labour markets, yet their longer-term prospects for retirement have often been neglected. Importantly, this edited volume addresses the links between disadvantages experienced early in careers and the much later, often substantial, consequences for retirement and old age income. Going beyond the ordinary, these interdisciplinary studies fill knowledge gaps, especially with respect to social risk groups and geographical spread. They investigate how flexibilization of work and pension reforms challenge youth today and how they will continue to challenge them in the future. Are they aware of their prospects – and can they save adequately for their old age retirement?'

'The merits of Waqf Islamic endowments have been rediscovered in recent years and they are now found world-wide wherever there are Muslim communities. It is the adaptability of Waqf, including the ability to change the share of benefactors, which has encouraged many to become founders. Of particular interest is the experience of Southeast Asia, a focus of this book, from which lessons can be learnt.'
