Handbook on City and Regional Leadership

Edited by Markku Sotarauta, Tampere University, Finland and Andrew Beer, University of South Australia, Australia

'The Handbook on City and Regional Leadership is the first comprehensive overview of place leadership in urban and regional research, edited by pioneers of the concept, Markku Sotarauta and Andrew Beer. Publication of the Handbook is very timely with the significant growth of research on the importance of agency in regional development in recent years. The Handbook covers a broad range of topics ranging from theoretical issues and empirical studies to methodological questions. It contains a rich and stimulating compilation of chapters and is a must-read for researchers as well as policy makers interested in promoting place leadership.'

Misinformation in the Digital Age

An American Infodemic

Monica Stephens, Durham University, UK, Jessie P.H. Poon, University at Buffalo, US and Gordon K.S. Tan, Singapore University of Technology and Design, Singapore

'Misinformation in the Digital Age: An American Infodemic has carved out a nice space in a crowded field by bringing an underused lens to the analysis – geography. Their topic is timely, and the theory has legs. This readable book can inform theory building beyond the scope of its contents.'

The International Geographical Union Series on Contemporary Geographies

Handbook on Migration and the Family

Edited by Johanna L. Waters, University College London, UK and Brenda S.A. Yeoh, National University of Singapore, Singapore

'Few things are more central to migration projects than the family, yet rarely in simple ways. This Handbook presents the transnational family in all of its complexity and multiplicity, tracing its diverse meanings over time, across space and generations. Inequalities and power dynamics are deeply woven into family relations, yet migration also generates novel familial arrangements and subjectivities. The rich contributions span a range of geographical contexts and adopt feminist, agency-centred and grounded approaches to crucially overturn long-standing normative assumptions about transnational families. The Handbook will be an essential resource for scholars and practitioners seeking to understand the personal and societal impacts of migration on families, and of families on migration.'

Handbook of Industrial Development

Edited by Patrizio Bianchi, Sandrine Labory, University of Ferrara, Italy and Philip R. Tomlinson, University of Bath, UK

'Industry is key not only to economic growth and jobs. Its ongoing transformation and a stronger and clearer directionality in policy action can critically contribute to establish sustainable development paths as well as to fight territorial imbalances. But how? This Handbook takes the challenge of unwinding this complex issue and analyses past experiences, potentials, limitations and perspectives for the future, adopting an intriguing multidisciplinary approach aimed at understanding both global and local stakes. An important contribution to the current efforts of both scientists and policymakers.'
