Research Handbook on International Law and Cities

Edited by Helmut Philipp Aust, Freie Universität Berlin, Germany and ILA Study Group on 'The Role of Cities in International Law', Janne E. Nijman, University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands and Miha Marcenko, Assistant Editor

'Aust and Nijman's Research Handbook on International Law and Cities captures the complexity, and the controversy, of the relationship between cities and international law in all its splendour. This is a skilfully designed and executed – and coherent

– work from the leading legal scholars in the field. The reader is led through the history, structure and many of the current issues in what is an increasingly well-established field, both academically and in practice. There will be many more thematic avenues to explore but the principles and the path are set out here. This book will become a dear friend for many historians, political scientists and lawyers, to name but a few.'

Handbook on Academic Freedom

Edited by Richard Watermeyer, University of Bristol, Rille Raaper, University of Durham and Mark Olssen, University of Surrey, UK

'The Handbook on Academic Freedom paints an extremely disturbing picture of how, globally, academics' ability to act as critical public intellectuals has been radically undermined by universities' shift from a collegial to a managerial mode of governance. However, this is not simply a critique of the myriad ways in which academics' "performance" is now constantly audited and monitored in a way that limits their freedom to perform their proper function, but also a much-needed call to arms.'

How to Enhance Your Research
100 Practical Tips for Academics

Don J. Webber, University of Sheffield, UK
'Academia, while immensely rewarding, can be a pretty tough gig, particularly for junior researchers. In this book, Professor Webber, based on years of experience across countries and institutions, provides a very accessible set of tips to make the academic journey less daunting and more enjoyable. A delightfully free-flowing read, with many nuggets of quality information, for new and established academics as well as research leaders – a book that could easily become a staple on an academic's bookshelf.'

Handbook for Sustainable Tourism Practitioners

The Essential Toolbox

Edited by Anna Spenceley, independent consultant, IUCN WCPA Tourism and Protected Areas Specialist Group, Global Sustainable Tourism Council, Travelyst, University of Brighton, UK and University of Johannesburg, South Africa

'Written by world experts in their fields, it fills a gap in the market for sustainable tourism research that is helpful and practical. It is gratifying to read all these chapters from consultants and practice-oriented academics that I have admired for years, which allow us an insight into the experience they have gained over decades of working for some of the most influential international organisations, overseas development agencies, governments and protected areas.'

How to be a Reflexive Researcher

Paul Hibbert, University of St Andrews, UK

'Reflexivity is an often misunderstood concept and an art that few have mastered but everybody would benefit from. In this informative and inspiring book, Professor Paul Hibbert, in an accessible and engaging manner, discusses theoretical debates on reflexivity and demonstrates what it means, in practical terms, to be a reflexive researcher. The book combines intellectual rigour – underpinned by a thorough reading of sources drawing on a range of disciplines – with a mature authenticity, built on personal experience. An absolute must-read for all academics, students and practitioners interested in reflexivity.'

A Research Agenda for Food Systems

Edited by Colin L. Sage, Independent Research Scholar

'This is a fine and wonderful book. We know that food systems worldwide have been transformed in recent decades. They have made food a raging success, more people fed than ever. They also cause vast ill-health and planetary harm, and leave hundreds of millions of people still hungry. This is a book about the urgent need for redesign and collective action. It brings vital clarity to the right questions, and shows how improvements in social justice can occur.'

Vertical Cities

Micro-segregation, Social Mix and Urban Housing Markets

Edited by Thomas Maloutas, Harokopio University, Greece and Nikos Karadimitriou, University College London, UK

'This book has a highly original focus on micro-segregation, particularly vertical, revealing forms of housing and urban inequalities and hierarchies that are otherwise hidden in socially mixed neighborhoods. Examples from different cities worldwide show how widespread those micro-segregations are, but also how different, in form, in the way they are shaped by historical processes and market dynamics, and in the local social configurations they create.'
