Elgar European Law series

Dora Kostakopoulou, Chair of the Scientific Committee of the Fundamental Rights Agency of the European Union and KU Leuven, Belgium

This theoretically ambitious work combines analytical, institutional and critical approaches in order to provide an in-depth, panoramic and contextual account of European Union citizenship law and policy.

‘This book captures both the evolution of EU citizenship since its establishment and the author’s publication trajectory on citizenship. ... it provides a highly original account of EU citizenship law and policy. It shows how institutional actors and the practice of citizenship contribute to transformative change. It addresses possible future developments, while remaining faithful to the principled take on the values, principles and practices that enhance human life and (should) underlie EU citizenship as an institution. In sum, a thought-provoking book.’
– Annette Schrauwen, European Journal of Migration and Law

‘This is a vital book for our time of a new wave of nationalism.’
– Marta Moskal, Ethnic and Racial Studies
