Challenges to Assumptions in Competition Law

ASCOLA Competition Law series

Edited by David Bosco, Professor, Aix-Marseille Université, France and Michal S. Gal, Professor and Director, Center for Law and Technology, University of Haifa, Israel

This timely book addresses the contemporary complexities within competition law, questioning whether the founding principles of competition law still hold true today. It explores three main present-day challenges for competition law: the impact of the digital economy and innovative sectors, the challenges facing emerging countries, and current institutional issues.

‘This is an impressive book, featuring contributions from all over the world and organized around a critical, under-examined theme: What assumptions are relied on in competition law analysis, and are they fit for the purpose as applied to globalized and digitalized markets? The reader will find some new voices and fresh thinking, as typically assembled and provoked by ASCOLA, the international academic society of competition law researchers.’
