'Unusual and inviting critical self-reflection. . . a valuable resource' Karen S. Moser, Category Chair, CMI Management Book of the Year

'Deals with the topic in creative and engaging ways.'
– Suth Sacks, Category Judge, CMI Management Book of the Year

Donna Ladkin gives us an entirely novel and creative approach to thinking about, and importantly, doing and teaching ethics. The book is practice-based in the best sense of the word, using meditation and other attention techniques to enhance awareness, inquiry, and ultimately ethical insight at the personal and organizational levels. It is accessible to students at all levels of learning, with exercises that will generate personal insights. At the same time, it is grounded in a wide range of sources, both philosophical and managerial, that enhance the credibility of its approach. This book will enhance the ethics and the lives of people who read it and practice its approaches.'

– Sandra Waddock, Boston College, Carroll School of Management, US

'This book guides students and practitioners through the building blocks of ethical practice. It provides readers with an opportunity to reflect on their beliefs and develop skills they need to competently resolve the thorny ethical problems of organizational life. Ladkin grounds her discussion in virtue ethics and the ethics of care but never lets the philosophic theories weigh it down. The book offers an intellectually sound, friendly, and helpful take on the practice of organizational ethics.'

– Joanne B. Ciulla, University of Richmond, US
