Transfer of Property and Private International Law

Private International Law series

Edited by Janeen M. Carruthers, Professor of Private Law, University of Glasgow, UK

This comprehensive new title brings together seminal articles on the subject of transfer of property and private international law, ranging from the early twentieth century to present day. The first volume focuses on classic principles concerning the lex situs rule, as well as on specialties regarding immovable property and movable property, conditional sale and securities transactions, goods in transit and confiscation of property. The second volume is devoted to an in depth and insightful discussion of cultural property and private international law. With an original introduction by the editor, the collection provides a valuable source of reference for researchers and academics.

‘In this Research Collection Professor Carruthers has drawn together an impressively varied and comprehensive range of articles on all aspects of the transfer of property in private international law. It will be invaluable to all those who teach, study, research or work in this area. As explained in the extremely clear and helpful introduction, the collection covers both general principles and also pays particular attention to different types of property and contracts. Topics such as the transfer of intangible property, conditional sales and transfers of security are of great and increasing commercial importance and are all thoroughly examined in the first volume. The second volume which focuses on cultural property is also a very welcome and useful compilation of the research in this interesting and important field.’
