Comparative Law Methodology

The International Library of Comparative Law series

Edited by Maurice Adams, Professor of General Jurisprudence, Tilburg University, the Netherlands, Jaakko Husa, Professor in Law and Globalisation, Faculty of Law, University of Helsinki, Finland and Marieke Oderkerk, Associate Professor of Comparative Law and Private International Law, University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands

This important two-volume collection draws together the most significant and instructive articles relating to comparative law methodology and offers vast and comprehensive coverage of practices, principles, methods and sources in comparative legal research. The first volume deals with preliminary considerations such as the aims of research and the questions one should ask, as well as how to select objects for comparison and formulate a research plan. The second volume focuses on the comparative research of regulation, description, and explanation, along with discussion on functionalism, quantitative approaches, translation issues, legal transplants and global challenges. Together with an original introduction by the editors that frames the articles and helps the reader to navigate them successfully, this collection offers a balanced body of seminal research which will benefit legal scholars, students, and all who are undertaking, or seeking to evaluate, comparative legal research.

‘This new compilation is well-balanced and unique, it contains the most relevant articles in the field of methodology of comparative law. Since so many monographs and articles have been published in recent years on this topic it makes sense to present the most important contributions. In particular, for teaching purposes the different views presented will enhance discussion and further the development of comparative legal studies. The collection will be a well-received and valuable resource for comparative law courses.’
