Models of Capitalism: Debating Strengths and Weaknesses

Edited by David Coates, Worrell Professor of Anglo-American Studies, Wake Forest University, US

This authoritative collection provides the reader with easy access to the full range of arguments now being developed to explain why some forms of economic organisation prospered best in the immediate past, and why some models now seem more effective than others in responding to the new global conditions of intensified international competition and rapid capital mobility.

‘Gathered together in this collection are all the main scholarly contributions to a set of crucial debates concerning the degree of convergence and divergence in the trajectory of modern capitalism, and the viability of different models of capitalism. Scholars working at the boundaries of political science, economics and sociology will find this three-volume collection indispensable for both research and teaching purposes.’

– Chris Howell, Oberlin College, US
