Edited by Justus Wesseler, Assistant Professor of Environmental and Natural Resource Economics, Wageningen University, The Netherlands, Hans-Peter Weikard, Associate Professor of Environmental and Natural Resource Economics, Wageningen University, The Netherlands and Robert D. Weaver, Professor of Agricultural Economics, Pennsylvania State University, US

This book explores some of the complexities of decision-making under risk and uncertainty in environmental and natural resource economics. Risk and uncertainty are inherent problems for economists, and the authors in this volume offer numerous challenges and opportunities to improve the tools we use to assess these concepts.

'This book provides an exciting perspective on the progress towards improved management of economic-environmental systems under risk and uncertainty. This is a book worth reading by all researchers and advanced students in the area of environmental policy and natural resource management.'
