Elder Law
Evolving European Perspectives
Edited by Ann Numhauer-Henning, Lund University, Sweden

‘At a time when Western countries are increasingly preoccupied with the challenges posed by an ageing population, few legal scholars have turned their attention to the multiplicity of issues raised by ageing. The Norma Elder Law Research Environment is the honorable exception. Bringing together writers from a variety of legal disciplines and backgrounds, this timely collection examines the key issues associated with an ageing population in an innovative and thought-provoking manner.’

Patenting Genes
The Requirement of Industrial Application
Marta Díaz Pozo, PhD, Centre for Commercial Law Studies, Queen Mary, University of London, UK

‘This insightful and accessible book provides a uniquely thorough examination of the European requirement of industrial application and the determination of the scope of protection of gene patents. It is a scholarly work of the highest quality and rewards readers with its clear and accessible approach to the often overlooked legal issues surrounding the patentability of biotechnological inventions on grounds of industrial application. The book is highly recommended for academics and for practitioners alike.’

On Hunger
Science, Ethics and the Law
Laura Westra, University of Windsor, Canada and University of Parma, Italy

Most of the existing literature on hunger and food does not address the harm that current practices inflict on people globally. Laura Westra’s On Hunger focuses on the interface between food and public health and on the flawed regulations intended to protect us. Food not only represents nourishment for the body; it also possesses other valuable aspects that are protected by not only represents nourishment for the body; it also possesses other valuable aspects that are protected by international legal instruments. Westra argues for the importance of effecting radical changes: to protect and improve the present system of food production and distribution.

Research Handbook on EU Health Law and Policy
Edited by Tamara K. Hervey, Calum Alasdair Young and Louise E. Bishop, University of Sheffield, UK

‘This important new book offers a clear and informative guide to EU health law and policy, but it also does much more than that. The tensions at the heart of the EU’s engagement with health are tackled head-on, as are the implications of the Eurozone crisis and Brexit. Through its 19 engaging and lively chapters, this is the best account to date of EU health law and policy’s uncomfortable position at the intersection between the promotion of free trade, on the one hand, and public health, on the other.’

Innovation and Culture in Public Services
The Case of Independent Living
Steven DeMello, University of California, Berkeley, US and Peder Inge Furseth, BI Norwegian Business School, Norway

‘The authors have raised an important construct for all of us who work in the public sector regarding what underlies and directs the rapid advancement of technology solutions in developing and developed economies. Steven DeMello and Peder Inge Furseth deserve credit for raising our awareness to the true driver behind the successful integration and acceptance of technology in this increasingly innovation-driven world: culture.’

Handbook of Migration and Health
Edited by Felicity Thomas, University of Exeter, UK
‘The movement of people and populations is intrinsic to today’s globalised existence, with complex health and wellbeing consequences for people on the move, for host communities and for global health economies. Yet programmatic approaches to addressing the wellbeing of migrants, although badly needed, remain poorly developed in many parts of the world. Through this book Felicity Thomas successfully crosses disciplinary boundaries to bring together an authoritative, coordinated and comprehensive approach to what is one of the major health issues of our time.’

Sick of Inequality?
An Introduction to the Relationship between Inequality and Health
Andreas Bergh, Therese Nilsson, Lund University and Research Institute of Industrial Economics and Daniel Waldenström, Research Institute of Industrial Economics, Sweden and Paris School of Economics, France
‘With this book Andreas Bergh, Therese Nilsson and Daniel Waldenström bring a nuanced contribution to a research field torn by controversies and heated polemics. In a clear and pedagogical manner the authors sift through the research and weigh the evidence. It should be essential reading for anyone interested in the relationship between income inequalities and health.’

Health Policy
Choice, Equality and Cost
David Reisman, University of Surrey, UK and Nanyang Technological University, Singapore
‘Too often health economics proceeds without serious consideration of the concrete challenges of health policy. David Reisman’s new book does just the opposite: it starts with those challenges and shows what the economics of health care must be to address them. This makes the economics of health care inseparable from the ethics of health care. This book is highly recommended for clear and sensible thinking about the economics of health policy.’

Cost–Benefit Analysis and Health Care Evaluations, Second Edition
Robert J. Brent, Fordham University, US
Acclaim for the first edition:
Cost–benefit analysis is the only method of economic evaluation that can effectively indicate whether a health care treatment or intervention is worthwhile. In this thoroughly updated and revised second edition, Robert Brent expands the scope of the field by including the latest concepts and applications throughout all regions of the world. This book attempts to strengthen the link between cost–benefit analysis and the mainstream health care evaluation field, which is dominated by non-economists. The need to build a bridge between the two is more important than ever before, as the general understanding of cost–benefit analysis appears to have regressed.

Health: Economics, Policy & Law

Research Collections

Economics of Health Law
Edited by Ronen Avraham, University of Texas School of Law, US and Tel Aviv University, Israel, David A. Hyman, University of Illinois, and Charles M. Silver, University of Texas, School of Law, US
For this two-volume collection, Professors Avraham, Hyman and Silver have selected seminal contributions by eminent scholars in the fields of law, economics and medicine. The first volume explores the effects of access to healthcare on mortality and clinical outcomes, the financing of healthcare (including payment to providers, expanding costs, health insurance and the provision of long-term care), distribution of spending and expansion of provision. The second volume covers the regulation of healthcare practice, medical malpractice and liability, public health and ethical issues.

Global Health Law
Edited by Gian Luca Burci, Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Switzerland
‘This is an indispensable collection of seminal contributions to global health law. Global health law has come a long way in a short time, but it remains in its infancy. The issues are huge, complex and vital – and they demand interdisciplinarity. As we search for global approaches to global health problems, these twin books of primarily legal perspectives will provide an extremely rich resource.’

Handbook on Gender and Health
Edited by Jasmine Gideon, Birkbeck, University of London, UK
‘Gender, one of the most misunderstood but important determinants of health, is expertly analysed, reviewed and critiqued in this invaluable book. Jasmine Gideon and her co-authors deliver a comprehensive analysis of the meanings of both gender and health, and discuss both contemporary and more recent historical debates about the relationship between the two. With voices from the global north and south, and from both men and women, this book will be invaluable reading for anyone (including academics, practitioners, advocates, and activists) concerned with ensuring the links between gender and health – whether as determinant, outcome, or system response – are fully acknowledged, understood and addressed in order to improve health outcomes for everyone.”

Coroners' Recommendations and the Promise of Saved Lives

Jennifer Moore, The University of Otago, New Zealand and Stanford University, US

‘In this well-constructed empirical study Jennifer Moore provides insight on the contemporary role of coronial recommendations. This goes to the heart of the efficacy of the coroner’s preventive function. She explores the gap between rhetoric and reality about the role of the coroner as the ombudsman for the dead. Jennifer Moore’s important work fills a serious knowledge gap about coroners’ ancient role in advancing riders/recommendations and provides a basis for informed discussion about international coronial law reform and enhanced inquest practice.’

Healthy Cities

Public Health through Urban Planning

Chinmoy Sarkar and Chris Webster, University of Hong Kong, and John Gallacher, University of Oxford, UK

“Our cities’ built environments shape our health and well-being, and Chinmoy Sarkar, Chris Webster and John Gallacher conceptualize the “urban health niche” as an approach to public health and healthy-city planning. The book is of practical use for those involved in public policy, public health and urban planning. The text also has a place in academia as a good foundation for new research being done by epidemiologists, urban planners, economists, and sociologists.”

International Handbook on Ageing and Public Policy

Edited by Sarah Harper and Kate Hamblin, University of Oxford, UK with Jaco Hoffman, Kenneth Howse and George Leeson

‘International Handbook on Ageing and Public Policy gathers under one cover the collective knowledge of experts in the field who explore challenges arising from ageing populations around the world, and considers national state approaches to welfare for older people and how public and private initiatives work. College-level collections strong in public policies and aging will find this a powerful collection of in-depth articles suitable for framing inquiries and considering social structures.’
